If I own the domain name UrbanArtAwards its coz it will be used for the good of the forums and its members, as it should be. I cant really see that you can question my the ideals of what I do when you take a look at my track record. Do you think I have flipped and are now trying to destroy all the good that has come from these forums? or is it more likely that Im protecting things for its members 😊

Why don't ask what we want? Make a pool if your main concern are only the members of this forum.

but dan ignoring your sentiments can you not see that mark has been pushed out of something he worked his arse off on for four months and now, purely because you think you know better you're effectively saying 'i'll have that, thank you very much'?

i don't doubt you want to look after your forums, i just feel that this has been very underhand and you will not even give mark a fair crack to go free and run with his idea! if you want to survey the forum fine, but do it off your own back and stop hiding behind that poxy name.
start afresh and if it is a success no one can accuse you of muscling in. the way it looks, you are profiteering from the success of an event mark created, cultivated and presented.

regardless of the time of year it leaves a horrible taste in the mouth, i thought a lot more of you than to stoop that low dan, i really did.

oh come on! 🙄 your just being silly now 🙄 your just trying to push and push until you get your own way 🙄 I was hoping that a few of you would have realized that those sort of tactics dont work on me. The forum has not got to this stage by me being pushed around to suit individuals personal needs and views.

please don't play the victim dan, imagine if you ran this ship but i had the domain name and when i told you how to do things and you weren't happy to go along i said right i'll take it from here, after all your effort and hard work?

i don't want to control you or this forum, i don't want it to suit my own ends. i am more than happy to say my piece, see the other side and respond and be responded to. it is a basic human interaction and one that i am eternally proud to engage in, the last thing i'd ever want would be to compromise that pure human quality.

and I just don't understand why one person would "own" anything ! When I'm with a bunch of good friends and someone has a good idea such as "let's organize a big party for the new year", if we all agree and find it cool, then we split the tasks and everybody does a little something, and maybe the one who gave the idea will get a bit more involved, but the idea now belongs to the whole bunch of friends !

Would having the domain name co registered be a big problem now in that Fins does not want me involved in the Awards?

Can you tell me what would have happened in that situation? 🙄

I and Im sure most other members on here felt that the awards was part of the forums, it could not have taken place without this forum being behind it. If Fins feels that he wants to run it totally independent from here then thats fine, its his decision. For the sake of the other 5,700 odd people on here the UrbanArtAwards will continue as part of the forums.

O.K. that's got to the bottom of it.

I can understand why he's upset, being told he can bugger off and do something else on his own with his own name and not much chance of success because it's going to be undermined by the awards going on here in competition.

As I've already said I would have thought that the best solution would be to let FPR take his idea (and name) and run an independent awards which will be supported by this forum and WK and galleries and artists and blogs etc all putting traffic to FPR's site, this'll mean a bigger event with more accurate results and possibly more sponsorship money or expertise.

That would allow the 5700 members here, plus all those that aren't members here to make a real event, not just this forums event, it'll be better for the whole scene.

Spot on, CBL!

One set of awards, not directly associated with a particular forum, would be the best solution for everyone.

Silky- Is there really a need for you to organise a separate awards ceremony that would compete with, devalue and undermine FPR's awards? That would be a proper kick in the balls for FPR, and you know it.

The only reasons I can think of for doing this are selfish ones on your part. Perhaps you may be driven by the potential financial rewards, complementary artwork, etc. This is understandable because it is in your own self-interest, but it is not in the higher interest of forum members as you suggest. Nor is it in the higher interest of the street art scene.

A person that came up with a name, and owns the domain for it has the right to use it.

dan, did you make it clear to FPR that by helping him out at what was a stressful time, that your offer came with terms and conditions? Your 'help' appears to have been loaded with caveats that weren't explained - you took advantage and are now seemingly screwing FPR over.

The event was meant to be fun and although it was, this leaves a very sour taste in my mouth. The awards need a platform like these forums to work effectively, so why not just hand the public name of the awards to FPR, and get behind him? Afterall, if it's the interests of the members that are your first concern, then that would seem the best option would it not?

But members here won't be encouraged to support FPR will they, and running a small awards here as well will only fragment it all, I can see neither working next year.

The big man here would hand it over and let FPR run one main event across the whole scene, all forums, blogs, Wooster, nuart etc.

I was happy with the way thing went this year 😞 so why change it? why does this ownership thing pop up? as Jef says, its a matter of people joining up and working together.

Your contribution to this forum and knowledge of street art is very very minimal compared to a lot of people on here Dan. The idea for this forum and its original content was knicked from the old ebay forum. Now you seem to be doing the same with FRP's awards. I think if you insist on retaining FRP's work, then you're going to loose an awful lot of knowledgeble members to WK and an awful lot of respect from newcomers. Can you not see how unethical you're being ?

Right, i'm off to bed. I really hope this gets sorted amicably. Sharing would appear to be in the spirit of the movement, to facilitate trust. I hope relations aren't beyond repair in order to coordinate and work together in the future, or come to a decision that benefits all. I don't know enough about the awards or the people involved to have an informed opinion, but this needs to be a very transparent operation. The forum and awards work due to passion and goodwill. Once people question that, things change. This could tarnish the name of the awards, the individuals and peoples view about the scene. I would suggest that sleeping on this would be a good idea, in order to let feelings cool. Also, all options need to be discussed - keep dialogue open and think about all the options.

I think there are a lot of personal conflicts that seem to be revealing themselves in some of the posts in this thread. It can be an everlasting thread and it's getting extremely sad, bitter and disappointing. I'm going to bed now... I'll cross fingers and really hope things will cool down... Too much ego, too much fuss, too much useless attacks... A mirror of the world... Certainly not what I fight for ! Good night ! 😬
