You turned him down flat, did you not?

I suspect you can tell me my exact words, but turned down flat sounds a very exaggerated version of the event.

Are you saying you are now willing to share ownership with FPR, provided it is technically possible?

Just wondering, If someone came up with the idea a year or so ago on this forum (and posted it) would it then be their award show because they had the idea before anyone else?

until this is sorted there will be bad blood between people, have you not felt the vibes on the forum recently?

i find it staggering also you only feel that people should argue their own case and not speak up on behalf of others? i have better things to do than have pointless arguments with strangers at 1.20am. i'm here, pursuing this because i believe strongly that it needs resolving in order for us all to move on, with a clean slate.

if you knew me and what i'm about this would come as no surprise to you, perhaps you will get to see that over time.

Do you not think, for this forum to move on with a "clean slate", its going to take just TWO people Silky and FPR to come up with an appropriate resolution on this issue?

Not me, you or anyone else banging on, about something we do not have all the facts about.

I think we said about this in an earlier thread 😊

I think Fins has pretty much burnt his bridges in my direction 😞 so having joint ownership of a name he dunt even like would seem a bit strange.

If you are focussing on the name 'Urban Art Awards', then, as already mentioned, FPR appears to have reconsidered his position there.

If FPR came to you now and said "Silky, let's register the name of the awards in our joint names", would you object?

This is the key issue, Silky. It is your refusal to share ownership of the name that people object to most. This why I said that it seems like you have taken advantage of FPR.

Not sleepy yet thanks 😊 But seriously, if this is all about who had the "idea" first, and just for arguments sake we say a forum member posted this "idea" a year ago or so... would that person then "own" the awards because they had the "idea" first? 😊

I mean, it's kind of your point/argument right?

I think really Fins has started of the whole thing last year with a picture of me in his mind of being some crazy control freak 😬 and that whole thing has been created by others in some sort of attempt to push me around to change things on here to suit their personal needs and tastes. If Fins could have got past those feeling and realized that I am very willing to help him, and that I'm not the person thats been portrayed, we as a forum could still be working towards next year 🙏

But things have been twisted 😬 people have manipulated things behind the scenes, and it ended up that whatever I did it was always gonna come back to bit me 😬 I live an learn 😊 I completely respect what Finsbury is trying to do, but to turn round and let these threads happen like they have, has just made his own position very difficult 😬 firstly pots can't speak and if they could why would there only words be "oi kettle you're black".

Once upon a time pots and kettles used to put on open fires to heat up. The soot from the fire would turn them black. So it's one black thing calling another black thing black - thus the hypocrisy.

very confusing 😬

but why did the pot have the urge to call the kettle black? surely if they were on fire they'd be saying - "feck me this is hot!"

to which the kettle would reply "damn right" instead pot: "I know we're on fire but you're black" kettle: no i'm not you are pot:no im not you are and y were pots and kettles talking anyway?

I think the zebra calling the tiger a stripey tt...not that they could communicate either...

The pot calling the kettle black

Meaning

The notion of a criticism a person is making of another could equally well apply to themself.
Origin

This phrase originates in Cervantes' Don Quixote, or at least in Thomas Shelton's 1620 translation - Cervantes Saavedra's History of Don Quixote:

"You are like what is said that the frying-pan said to the kettle, 'Avant, black-browes'."

The first person who is recorded as using the phrase in English was William Penn, the founder of Pennsylvania, in his Some fruits of solitude, 1693:

"For a Covetous Man to inveigh against Prodigality... is for the Pot to call the Kettle black."

Shakespeare had previously expressed a similar notion in a line in Troilus and Cressida, 1601-
"The raven chides blackness."

and

http://www.answerbag.com/q_view/19199

It takes one to know one. I mean that's what it means , I wasn't calling you a pot. The kettle could answer, "Look who's talking." It goes way back to when cooking was done over fires. If the pot and kettle weren't already black cast iron when new they were soon black from the soot and smoke. The black has nothing to do with 'evil' or race. Usually though, there is a connotation of criticism in both the use of "black" and in the entire phrase. The pot is being hypocritical , criticising the kettle for a quality or action or something that the pot itself has. It's not as strong as Jesus' "log in the eye" analogy, where the criticizer has a bigger flaw than the criticized . If you wanta analyze it a bit more, you could move forward in time to when pots were still cast iron but kettles were being made of tin or other 'white' metals. Then the pot is criticising the kettle for becoming something the pot has always been. Or... the pot was black but the kettle shiny, the pot sees its own reflection in the shiny surface of the kettle and claims that the kettle, not it, was black. But the saying goes back to before white shiny kettles . If someone who spends all day answering questions here in the bag criticizes someone else who spends all day answering questions (ahem) by saying " you have too much time on your hands," then the pot is calling the kettle black.

what say Silky? This sounds like a fair solution? Banksy info still involved and we just have the one awards 😊 okay I've just read your response....no ones forcing anything - people have opinions and express them....I assumed the point of this debate was to find a solution..not to get to that point and then say...too late
